NOTE:

The Writing & Rhetoric series does not advocate a religious perspective in any way, but on occasion does include content from different religious, historical, and literary traditions as well as from secular sources. It does not pretend that there is no such thing as a religious viewpoint, nor does it assume that its audience comes from a particular viewpoint. Writing & Rhetoric may use a parable or a narrative derived from a particular tradition, such as a Hebrew parable, a Christian proverb, a Chinese proverb, a Greek myth, or a Muslim reference—all of which are strictly used as thoughtful literature (not as a religious lesson in any way). Classical Academic Press is happy to provide a full list of these references for your school to review. Writing & Rhetoric has been approved by some charter schools across the country, but we understand that each charter or traditional public school has different standards in terms of what they define as acceptable.
